Dual Degree at One Time Convergence Scheme Facts and Possibilities

The convergence scheme of IGNOU has been conceived by DEC, UGC and AICTE with the primary objective of enhancing enrollment to achieve the target gross enrollment ratio of 15% in the territory education sector as laid down in the eleventh five year plan. This scheme will help achieve these objectives by utilizing the idle capacities of the higher education sector by offering distance education courses of IGNOU to students of conventional courses as well as those who are out of the regular system.

In this reference, Directorate of Distance Education, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi Vedic Vishwavidyalaya has partnered with IGNOU to launch it's different courses and meet the common objective of reaching the unreached. MMYVV as a partner University of IGNOU are offering 28 programmes in the distance mode. The programmes include a range of courses from PG Degree to undergraduate courses as well as many vocational courses such as PG Diplomas and Certificate Programmes. MMYVV will be responsible for transacting the course curriculum to the students after admitting them. IGNOU will provide the study material and MMYVV will provide contact classes and other support services to the students with the help of our faculty and huge infrastructural facilities at Jabalpur, Bhopal and Indore where our regular campuses are located. IGNOU will conduct the term end examinations, possibly at our programme centres and will also provide the degree to the successful candidates.

The major highlights of this scheme are that MMYVV students who are enrolled in regular courses will have the option of going in for dual degree, one in the regular mode from our university and other in the Distance mode from IGNOU, which will help in making them multi skilled and increasing their employability in the market. A student pursuing M.A. (Education) can pursue MARD (Rural Development) from IGNOU in distance mode concurrently and enhance his chances of employment with better pay and perks just because of acquiring different skills, which can jointly prove useful to an organization involved in development of the access of education in rural areas. This was only an illustration out of many combinations of degree and diplomas that have now become possible for our students as well as those enrolled in other institutions but having access to our convergence centres. This scheme will help open an array of opportunities for the students of conventional system of education as well as those who are employed and want to enhance their skills for better opportunities. The detailed list of courses offered in convergence scheme can be viewed from our website.

Another important six months course in convergence scheme is BPP (Bachelors Preparatory Programme), this being a programme designed for those adult persons who have not completed their pre-graduate degree education and are now desirous of completing higher education but cannot afford to spend another two to four years in completing ten plus two system of education for becoming eligible to be enrolled for higher education. Those who complete this programme successfully, automatically become eligible to be enrolled for various degree and certificate programmes of IGNOU.

Besides this, certificate courses offered by convergence scheme can be done as part of vocational project work, which has been made mandatory by Department of Higher Education, e.g. Certificate in Organic Farming (COF) and Certificate in Business Skills (CBS).

MBA and B.Ed are the two major professional courses offered through convergence scheme in which admission is through entrance test conducted by IGNOU. The admission to various Management PG Diplomas is also through the OPENMAT entrance exam. Many other PG Diplomas are useful for higher education teachers as well as school education teachers.

The convergence scheme is a win-win situation for all as it provides access to all.

In Search of Excellence Leadership, Peak Performance and Transcendental Meditation New Research

London, 24 July 2009:

Peak performers have significantly higher degrees of brain and psychological development than the average population, according to a new study of brain functioning and measures of psychological development. Moreover, this higher level of brain functioning is strikingly similar to that found in people who practice Transcendental Meditation, which suggests that the qualities of peak performance might be systematically developed in anyone, through Transcendental Meditation.

Subjects in the study included world champion athletes, top-level managers, and leaders in a variety of fields, who were compared with average-performing control groups.

The study, entitled, Higher Development, Brain Integration, and Excellence in Leadership, is published in the most recent issue (2009, Volume: 47, Issue: 6) of Management Decision, a leading management journal in Britain.

The study was a collaboration between Oslo University College, the Norwegian School for Sport Sciences, and Norwegian Olympic Preparatory Centre, and Maharishi University of Management (MUM) in the USA.

Harald Harung, PhD, associate professor at Oslo University College, Dennis Heaton, PhD, co-Director of the MUM doctoral program in management; and Warren Blank, PhD, a top US management and organisational development consultant & Fred Travis PhD, had found that people who had been practising Transcendental MeditationTM up to seven years had a level of brain integration similar to peak performers, and those who had been practicing Transcendental Meditation for at least 20 years had significantly higher levels. “The qualities that we find in world-class performers are those that develop with Transcendental Meditation, both individually and collectively,” said Dr. Harung. This technique has also been associated with the development of self-actualisation as described by psychologist Abraham Maslow. For more information see www.t-m.org.uk.

Higher development, brain integration, and excellence in leadership

Findings – These studies support the model that leadership ability is closely related to psycho-physiological refinement – the authors found that higher integration of the electrical brain activity, more mature moral reasoning, and more frequent peak experiences are found in top performers compared to average performers.

Practical implications – The research suggests that practical methods for psycho-physiological refinement – such as the widely researched Transcendental Meditation technique – can be useful in developing more effective leadership. The brain integration scale presented here may be a reliable objective instrument for assessing an individual's leadership and performance capacity.
